GOING INTO THE MOUNTAINS.

Prospectors Rushing Into the Kiowa and Comanche Country.

Parties in from the Kiowa and Comanche reservations say that large numbers of prospectors are again going into the Wichita mountains to prospect for mineral, believing that the courts will sustain the application for injunction against the Indian agent molesting them. They declare that the law is explicit in putting the mining laws in force there and the Secretary of the interior usurps authority when he sets aside a law enacted by congress.

WRITES OF A BATTLE

Resident of Tsing Tao Sends Letter to Her Brother Here.

James McKinney received a letter from his sister, Mrs. Mary J. Bergen, who lives in Tsing Tao, China. The writer reports that all Americans in that city were safe on July 14 and had no fear of death or trouble. Writing of the battle of Tien Tsin, Mrs. Bergen says:

A German who called on us yesterday just came from Tien Tsin. He was radiant and said the battle was the biggest thing he ever saw in his life, and it was simply grand to see all the allied nations together and to compare their methods of fighting and in taking the enemy's forts. The Germans followed the tactics of running forward, firing, falling on their faces, then up again, repeating the performance at every step as they advanced. But the American soldiers pleased him most. A detail of Uncle Sam's soldiers walked rapidly up to the edge of a swamp filled with water and waded straight through it, the water coming to their waists, but never moving a hair out of the way. After leaving the swamp they marched directly to the Chinese fort, walked right into it and took possession, all this with the loss of but one soldier.

While the Americans were doing this the German soldiers held their breath, expecting every moment to see the last one of them shot or cut down. The English and Americans have good war methods. This German officer said: "Imagine how we felt fighting side by side with the French. It was glorious to have all the different nations represented in the battle, as each could learn something from the other."

Mrs. Bergen closes her letter by saying that all of the missionaries have come in from the interior and in the event of an outbreak of trouble can be transported to Japan immediately.
